

La subida del precio del petróleo y la recuperación de las grandes economías, como la brasileña, impulsan las ventas de los gigantes de la región, que cerraron 2017 con alzas en sus resultados.

Las economías de América Latina, en su conjunto, terminaron 2017 con un alza del PIB de 1.3%, en su primer avance después de dos años de recesión y otros cuatro de desaceleración. Pero el vaso todavía está sólo medio lleno, y varios factores pueden frenar el crecimiento.

El Fondo Monetario Internacional (FMI) acaba de rebajar sus previsiones para el PIB de la región de América Latina y el Caribe de 2 a 1.6%. El organismo apuntó que esa reducción es reflejo de los problemas de Argentina, la incertidumbre política en Brasil y las tensiones comerciales, aún sin resolver, entre México y el gobierno de Donald Trump.

Pese a ello, "el desempeño de la región para 2018 se desenvolverá en un contexto que seguirá siendo favorable tanto en el ámbito real como monetario. En 2018 se espera que la economía mundial se expanda a tasas cercanas a las de 2017 y que se registre un mayor dinamismo en las economías emergentes respecto de las desarrolladas", señala un estudio de la Comisión Económica para América Latina y el Caribe (Cepal). La solidez del consumo interno y las exportaciones, las bajas tasas de interés y el aumento de los precios de las materias primas explican las buenas previsiones, agrega esta institución de la ONU.

La recuperación de los precios del petróleo, una de las mayores fuentes de riqueza de la región, refleja esta tendencia. Las tres principales empresas de América Latina, según este ranking que elabora Expansión, son firmas estatales de esta industria: Petrobras (Brasil), PDVSA (Venezuela) y Pemex impulsaron sus ventas el año pasado un 9%, un 56.2% y un 28%, respectivamente.

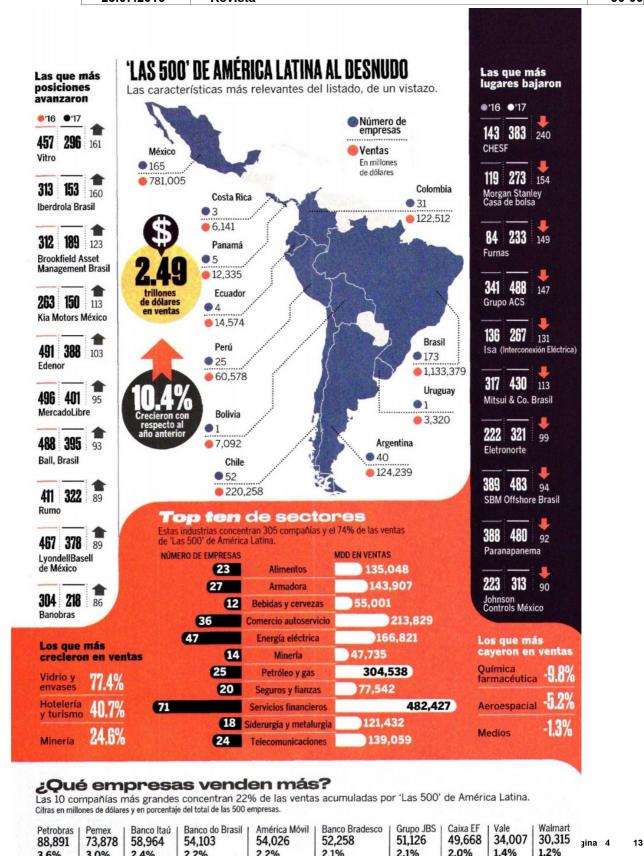

En realidad, gran parte de 'Las 500' vivieron un buen 2017 y mejoraron sus cifras. Esto prueba que, a pesar de los nubarrones que amenazan el crecimiento, el sol vuelve a brillar sobre la mayoría de las industrias de la región.
